This work is distinguished, in an extraordinary degree, by all those attractive qualities which have rendered the nome of G. W. M. Reynolds to wisely relevated, and caused his writings to be so eagerly sought affected and caused his writings to be so eagerly sought affected and caused his writings to be so eagerly sought affected and caused his writings to be so eagerly sought affected in which a dissuads with the band of a master. He has turned London aristochastic life and character, and he has worked up these the state of London aristochastic life and character and it is that before the render in all its features. The series of thrilling iocalents, descriptions and vivid delineations, by which he accomplished this result, have never been excelled, in the intensity of interest which they create by any writer.

This work is of a character similar to the "Court of London," by the same amither. It takes, however, a wider range among the aristochart and an analysis of the first character of London, and exhibits their daily life on a more extensive scale. The previous of his first has readed while they fascimate his attention.
